Dear Friends:

Welcome to the 2nd Annual "Men Of Vision" Breakfast. Today we honor men who have truly given back to this community. For the first time, we are honoring an organization that has been a support system to young fathers.

I want to thank each of you for taking time out of your busy schedules to attend this morning. You had to make choices and we are so pleased that you decided to be here with us. You recognize the importance in lifting up those persons and organizations who make a difference in the lives of others. Our honorees see in others possibilities that they do no see in themselves. They have provided hope to the hopeless, help to the helpless and have been surrogate fathers to numerous young men in search of their destiny.

May God continue to bless and keep each of you in His infinite care.

Yours truly,

Mildred C. Crump

PHILIP S. THOMAS

Philip is the Vice President for Arts Education for the New Jersey Performing Arts Center (NJPAC) in Newark, Since joining NJPAC in 1992, Philip has been responsible for developing a comprehensive Arts Education Department for NJPAC. When the arts center opens in October, 1997, the Arts Education Department will already be in ils fifth year of programming which is uncommon in the development of major performing arts institutions.

The mission of his department is to provide New Jersey children, families and educators with the opportunity to participate in high quality performing arts experiences in schools , community based venues, and a the NJPAC.

The early pilot projects have begun to fulfill this mission by connecting urban and suburban children and linking world-class artist with the best from New Jersey. In 1994, Two hundred children from Newark and Union participated in a five week dance residency culminating in five performances of a production titled "Fat City" for over 8,800 children and adults at Newark Symphony Hall. Mural Magic, a second project , involved over 2,000 children from 141; creating 185 murals which surround the NJPAC construction site today.

Other successes involve the NJPAC Dance Academy a project designed as a school-based residency developed in cooperation with the Alvin Ailey American Dance Center, and sponsored by AT&T. Over 15,000 youngsters have already been involved in the early pilot projects.

Prior to joining NJPAC, Philip was Artistic Director of the Carter G, Woodson Foundation, a multi-disciplinary arts organization. During his seven years at the foundation , he administered a national touring program, presented an annual statewide performing arts series and coordinated arts education programs in local school districts.

He served as the Director of Marketing at Newark Symphony Hall from 1982 - 1984. He was instrumental in introducing such projects as Performance Time for Young People, The Friends of Symphony Hall and Dance Time for Young People.

As the Arts Development Coordinator for the New Jersey State Council on the Arts, Philip was for organizing the Arts Development Services Program, which provides management training and skills development opportunities for arts organizations and individual artist. Philip was one of 15 nationwide recipients of a National Endowment for the Arts Fellowship in Arts Administration.

He serves on the Board of Directors for the Carter G. Woodson Foundation, on the Board of Trustees for the Newark Boys Chorus School and the New Jersey Black Issues Convention. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree in Theater from Montclair State University and served in the United States Army in Vietnam.

EDWIN AROCHO

Edwin has spent most of his life shaping the lives of youth. He began working with children as a counselor for the Catholic Youth Organization Summer Job Program at age fourteen. This became the model for a life of volunteer service. He went on to become a religious counselor to youth at Our Lady of Good Counsel Church and later a tutor in the District's After School Youth Development Program.

He joined the Newark School District in 1980, right out of college. Immediately, he began his volunteer work with youth, serving successively as coach, manager, umpire, Vice President and President of the Roberto Clemente Little League of Newark. His focus was not just love of the sport but also a passion for helping to guide youth to citizenship.

Born in San Sabastian, Puerto Rico, Edwin moved to Newark with his family at age two, where he attended St. Michael's Grammar and Essex Catholic High Schools. He went on to earn a Bachelor of Arts Degree at Montclair State University, where he is currently working on a master's in Education. He teaches Bilingual classes at the Roberto Clemente Elementary School.

He lives in Newark's North Ward with his wife Zoraida and their children ages eleven to fifteen.

YOUNG FATHERS PROGRAM

The Young Fathers Program is part of an initiative of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey's, Division of Adolescent and Young Adult Medicine.

A UMDNJ assessment study conducted in the summer of 1986 on the needs of teen fathers in the City of Newark revealed the adolescent fathers to be misrepresented and disregarded. They were shown to be usually strongly attached to their offspring but often impeded in the execution of their paternal responsibilities by educational, financial and emotional barriers.

In response the Young Fathers Program was developed to assist adolescent fathers in their transition into adulthood by enhancing their abilities to meet the financial, social and emotional demands of fatherhood. The program seeks to improve the quality of life of its participants, improve parent - child relationships, reduce the abuse or neglect of children, reduce repeated unwanted pregnancies, and strengthen individual family systems in general.

The services of the Young Fathers Program are made known to the community through a wide range of outreach and recruitment activities. Currently 250 young fathers , ages 15-23, are enrolled in the program. Since its inception in March 1987, more than 1,200 fathers have utilized its services.

In 1995 the Association of American Medical Colleges awarded the New Jersey Medical School the Outstanding Community Service Award, acknowledging the contributions of the Young Fathers Program's role in the improvement of our nation's health. The operators of the program are Robert L. Johnson, MD, FAAP - Director; Paulette Stanford, MD, FAAP - Associate Director; Walter L. Douglas Jr. - Administrator and Charles Dixon - Coordinator.
